WILLIAM MORRIS COLLECTION

Dish Cloths

Absorbs 15 times their own weight, and outlasts 16 sheets of paper towels - saving you money and helping protect our environment.

Great for general household cleaning from washing dishes and kitchen cleanup to bathroom scrubbing or as a washcloth in the shower. Clean windows without leaving streaks or lint, and polish silver without being abrasive. They are even gentle enough on the baby.

Made of 70% cellulose and 30% cotton, these cloths are soft to the touch, yet strong and durable with lasting quality. Our environmentally-responsive cloths are 100% biodegradable because of their all-natural fibers and watercolor based prints.

A watercolor base dye is infused into the cloth, ensuring a design with long-lasting results. Safe to use with bleach. Easy to clean – place in dishwasher on top rack, in the washing machine, or microwave wet for two minutes to disinfect.

Sunflower

Blue/Beige

Sunflower, designed by William Morris in 1879 Sunflower is a beautiful symmetrical pattern featuring central sunflowers with abundant grapevines and glorious curling leaves. Sunflowers were among Morris's favourite plants and featured in several of his own gardens including Red House, in Bexleyheath, Kent. Sunflowers appear in Morris's designs, prose and lectures. In his famous lecture Making the Best of It (1880) Morris wrote of the Sunflower: '... though a late comer to our gardens, [the sunflower] is by no means to be despised, since it will grow anywhere, and is both interesting and beautiful, with its sharply chiselled yellow florets relieved by the quaintly patterned sad-coloured centre clogged with honey and beset with bees and butterflies'.
